The upper portion of Lindsay Park was used as a parade ground for training Union soldiers stationed at Camp McClellan. Union soldiers and Indian prisoners were very much a part of the Village in the 1860's. After the Civil War, the heavily wooded hills of the camp became McClellan Park before being developed as one of the city's treasured residential districts in the late 1800's and early 1900's.

The steamboat company used the repaired. The bridge burned and was soon Effie Afton. The bridge struck by the steamboat span the river here was built by the first bridge to built west of the Mississippi. The first railway 1900's is a tangible remnant of the first railway. The log trestle railroad bridge added in the early 1900's is a tangible remnant of the first railway running water.

The oldest house on its original site is also the only log frame house. Built in 1848 of 12" and 15" bark covered logs on a limestone foundation, this earliest of split levels was built directly over a spring at 1919 11th Street and therefore had led down to drink at the river's edge.

River Drive was known as Front Street and did not go east from Mound Street because of the river. Originally, 11th Street was known as Main Street and then became Eddy Street. Walnut Avenue became 12th Street and Summit Avenue, the highest point in the Village, became 13th Street. Jersey Ridge Road was aptly named because it was the route the Jersey cows were led down to drink at the river's edge.

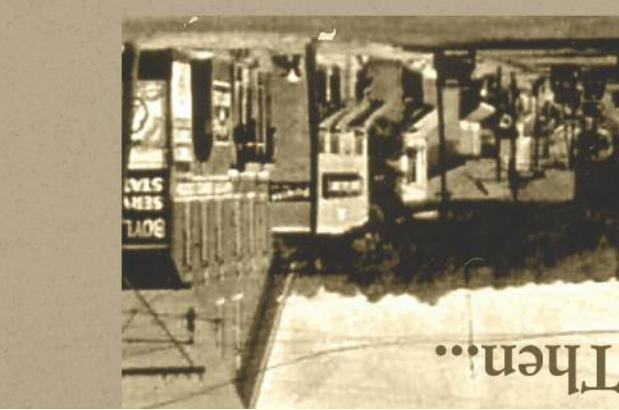

The Claim House, the first house west of the Mississippi, was built in 1832 and moved to its current location at 1329 College Avenue. The entire Sac and Fox Nation gathered here for the last time in 1836 to sign a treaty relinquishing their lands forever. Chief Black Hawk and his warriors camped on the upper Lindsay Park river overlook, and during the four days which followed, were captured on canvas by famed Western artist George Catlin.

Points of Interest:

Loggers on the Mississippi River

The Village of East Davenport, added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1980, is a sixty square block district, first established in 1851 as a logging town. The first saw mill was owned and operated by Robert Christie who built a mansion () on the hill above the Village so he could have a view of the river and his operations without having to always be down in the heart of the action. Saw mills soon lined the river's edge from Bridge Avenue to the eddy at the foot of Mound Street. Logs from the northern forests were rafted to the sawmills of the Village and carried as far west as Denver on the newly built railroad. Until 1904, lumbering was the basis for the Village's economy, but depleted forests and a disastrous riverfront fire in the lumber mills that lined the river's edge ended the era of logging in the Village.

Then...

Now...

Welcome! to the Village of East Davenport – a quaint historic shopping district located on the banks of the Mississippi River. The Village is the perfect place to spend the day with your family and friends. Experience the true essence of "Main Street America" where local shop owners greet you with a warm smile, offer impeccable service, and love getting to know their customers. Spend the day strolling down the streets and browsing the unique stores. Recharge your batteries with a bite to eat or a refreshment in one of the wonderful eateries or watering holes, then shop some more! Leave the hustle and bustle of the malls behind you! In the Village, you'll find the time to smell the flowers in the parks, breathe in the fresh air of outdoor shopping, and enjoy friendly conversation. See you soon!

Experience the unique sculpture of

Isabel Bloom

For more than fifty years, Isabel Bloom, a native Iowa artist, who once studied under the watchful eye of American master Grant Wood, created sculptures to resemble weathered bronze of the Victorian era. Today, her protégé Donna Young, continues to honor Isabel's style and has created many of our most popular recent sculpture designs.
